

The hoopla and uproar over the superbowl entertainment is overdone and for the most part a waste of time and money. If you (FCC) are to do anything about the brief, and I mean brief, near exposure of a breast (it was not complete by any means and really only viewable by use of the internet replay and such technology), then you better start with the rest of general television first...that would trying to build a dam in the middle of the river. There are so many programs that equal or exceed the things that were done on this show...where do you plan to start? I actually draw more of a line on dinglefritz's constant crotch grabbing than the lightening flash of a semi-covered breast. The whole show was ok...I would have rather watched the commercials anyway.
